The North was once a friendly neighbor to Endoria. Then, the kingdom of Araluen invaded and the country was terrorized for years. The devastating war ended with the so-called Reconciliation Treaty, in which Endoria had to surrender a number of northern towns and coastal areas to Araluen. This treaty kept the war far from Endoria for years and the damage caused by the conflict was practically forgotten. Now, the truce is over again. The northern territory has been ravaged once again by Araluen soldiers and mercenaries, driven to conquer the rest of the country. They made a short, sharp strike, but now they are here for the long haul. Along with several other countries, Endoria is at war again, and the war is taking its toll. The population is fleeing the north in droves, and more and more people are losing their lives to the invaders. What now remains of the kingdom is a poor country and isolated from the rest of the continent. Since there are no alliances left, Endoria is on her own, and the kingdom is short on resources. Those who survived the war and the refugees are now at the mercy of the invaders. In this chapter the hero, Kai, embarks on his quest to free his country from the invaders. Kai is an adventurous man who enjoys interacting with people and seeing new things. He is the son of the exiled ruler of Endoria and his wife from Araluen, and grew up in the kingdom of Araluen. The world of Endoria consists of several provinces separated by a vast ocean and a swampy coastal region. Most of the land is hilly or mountainous with occasional forests, grasslands, or marshlands. The kingdom consists of several provinces, including the capital, Ranvar, which is located on the eastern coast of the mainland. The new province that was given to Araluen is called Marvall, and it is located along the northern part of the mainland. After that, a book called the Book of Araluen comes to Kai's notice, which contains a message that has been sent to him from the ruler of Araluen.
